*United Way of Southeastern Pennsylvania does not and never has funded the ACORN group that you may have heard about in recent days. In our region there is a respected affiliated organization called the Acorn Institute which does research and advocacy on social issues, and we provide a small grant to the Acorn Institute (a separately-run nonprofit that does not engage in political activity or direct services) for public education activities related to school financing reform. In addition, our funding is matched by grants from a consortium of other reputable funders.

United Way has met with the Acorn Institute on several occasions and we are comfortable that they are a separate nonprofit from Acorn and we have received written confirmation from the Institute that our funding is not related to those activities.

Thank you.
